

EI Development from the CAEI

For EI development to be effective it needs to be:

- Individual-oriented – because each person's EI development needs are different
- Developmental – starting with an assessment and continuing with supported development
- About attitudes – developing emotionally intelligent attitudes and habits that lead to effective self and relationship management
- Over time – to sustain the changes in attitudes and habits over the long term
- Ethical – provided by qualified practitioners who have developed their own EI

For organisations: we either work with you to design and implement effective EI development programmes specific to your needs, or we run 'Train the Trainer' programmes to provide your organisation with people who have the necessary attitudes and skills to implement long-term EI strategies.

For individuals: we provide individual programmes for developing your personal EI, or practitioner courses if you are seeking to specialise in EI to help develop others.
