

IT TAKES TWO – THE LAUNCH

In last year's article 'It Takes Two', Amanda Knight announced the development of a new relationship management diagnostic, informed by emotional intelligence principles and recognised relationship frameworks such as Transactional Analysis (TA), FIRO™, and attachment theory.

Following a pilot study, this tool is now being launched into the marketplace this summer, and AppliedEI ezine readers can benefit from a free trial*!

Introducing the SRi

Called the SRi (pronounced 'shree'), the Successful Relationships Indicator is a new personal development diagnostic and development tool designed to help you understand how you relate with yourself and with others, both personally and professionally.

Developed and distributed by EI development consultants Minds4Success, the SRi is available as an online self assessment questionnaire with an instant report that does not require feedback from an accredited consultant. The report is written in a non-judgmental and empowering way so that the individual can make real use of the insights and take charge of their own development by following the recommended 'next steps'.

It has been designed with the coach in mind however, and is an essential addition to the coach's toolbox. A 360 element is also available for accredited users to administer. Affordable accreditation training days will be run throughout the year and are highly recommended to ensure that you maximise the benefits of the SRi for your clients and for your coaching practice.

Your free trial*!

*To take advantage of your free trial of the SRi, please contact Amanda Knight at amanda@minds4success.co.uk by 30th September 2008, quoting ref. Ezine08 and she will arrange for you to receive your free access. She will also let you have full details of the SRi and how you can purchase further reports.

If you wish to become an accredited user Amanda can also provide you with full details of the accreditation training including costs and dates.